For Immediate Release

Philadelphia Orchestra Cellist Bob Cafaro's Battle and Victory Against Multiple Sclerosis

(September, 2017; Philadelphia, PA) Bob Cafaro has been a cellist with the Philadelphia Orchestra since 1985.

In early 1999, Bob was diagnosed with Multiple Sclerosis. Six months later he was nearly blind, unable to use his hands, and he was told he would be on permanent disability.

Refusing to accept his prognosis, Bob set out to cure himself of the disease. He has since continued his career as a cellist with the Philadelphia Orchestra.

Today he is in perfect health and shows no signs of MS.

In his new book, When the Music Stopped, Bob shares the knowledge he gained from extensive research, personal life experiences, and studying people who have accomplished the impossible.

Signed, printed copies of When the Music Stopped are available on Bob's website at www.bobcafar.com. When the Music Stopped is also available on Amazon.com for Kindle download and Barnes & Noble, for Nook download.

On his remarkable journey, Bob notes: "Medicine and neurology may be limited in treating MS, but you are not."
